Could you help us with a new study?

Our laboratory is starting a new study examining relationships between emotions, hormones, and pain. We need some help selecting videos for the study. We have put together a collection of short videos and would like for you to rate them based on how they make you feel. They are generally positive videos. We will use the ratings you provide to determine which videos to use in the full study. All you have to do is watch 6 videos (randomly selected from the full set) and complete an online survey about each one. It should take less than 40 minutes to do the entire study. You do not have to complete a consent form to do this study -- the only personal information we will collect is your gender and your approximate age. You need to have speakers or headphones to do the survey. You won't be compensated for participating, but your input will help us greatly! The link to the survey page below contains all the instructions you need. Don't worry if the quality of the videos is poor -- we have better versions that will be used in the full study. Please make sure there are no distractions and you can settle in and fully watch the videos. If you have questions or concerns, you can email youngerlab@uab.edu
